

Holy Anger — The Emotion You Were Told Not to Have

Righteous Anger as a Pathway to Healing

"Be angry and do not sin." — Ephesians 4:26

KEY CONCEPTS

1 Why survivors can't access anger

In a narcissistic relationship, showing anger was dangerous. It escalated things, became evidence of your instability, or was turned against you. So your nervous system learned to bypass anger entirely — to go straight to sadness, confusion, or self-blame. Many survivors don't even know they're angry.

2 The difference between anger and bitterness

Anger says: what happened was wrong. It is present-tense, informational, and cleansing. Bitterness is anger that has nowhere to go — it loops and festers. The goal is not to stay angry. The goal is to let anger move through you, do its work, and release. That is actually what Ephesians 4:26 describes.

3 Anger as information from God

Your anger is telling you something sacred was violated. A covenant was broken. A soul was diminished. That anger is not a sin — it is a signal. And when you can finally feel it, even briefly, it often unlocks grief that was trapped underneath. Freedom often comes through anger, not around it.

THIS WEEK'S PRACTICE

Allowed anger: Find 3 minutes of privacy. Press your palms together firmly. Say out loud (or write): 'What happened to me was wrong. I deserved better. I am allowed to be angry about this.' Notice your body's response.

YOUR REFLECTION

'My anger is information, not sin. Something sacred was violated, and I am allowed to name it.'

YOUR NOTES & JOURNAL SPACE

WANT TO GO DEEPER?

The full curriculum has an entire Holy Anger module with an Anger Discharge Menu of safe somatic practices. We learn to feel, move, and release anger in ways that heal rather than harm. All inside Reclaim Your Self at $27/month.

knownlovedcoaching.com | Reclaim Your Self Community — \$27/month